Narconon Chilocco will soon be the largest drug rehabilitation program in North America serving people from all across the United States and Canada.

Chilocco with its 80 buildings and facilities on 165 acres of land, sports grounds (golf, tennis, football), pool, gym, workshops and lake, provides an excellent environment for drug rehabilitation.

For almost 100 years Chilocco was used to educate Native American children from across the United States so they could learn the skills to build a new life. The Chilocco Development Authority, composed of 5 tribal leaders, has chosen Narconon, which uses L. Ron Hubbard's drug rehabilitation technology, to use these facilities for its drug & alcohol rehabilitation center.

A proclamation recently signed by Narconon and the tribal leaders states, "be it resolved that we pledge our mutual cooperation and agreement, to always work toward the betterment of those who suffer from the scourge of chemical dependency, where lives may be renewed from the treatment received at Chilocco, and may these persons also, as did the young Indian people of days gone by, look back upon their stay at Chilocco as a new beginning of life for themselves and their families".

If we don't take responsibility for the nation's drug problem, who will? We have the responsibility because we have the technology.
